About Paul Shaffer:

World-renowned bandleader Paul Shaffer has been David Letterman's musical director and sidekick for the past 32 years. A Grammy Award-winning master of musical and verbal improv, Shaffer has been musical director at the White House, authored the best-selling memoir We'll Be Here For the Rest of Our Lives, and traded on-air quips with celebrities from Julia Roberts, Tina Fey, and Nathan Lane to Bill Murray, Donald Trump, and Jack Black.

In addition to his albums “Coast to Coast” (1989) and “The World's Most Dangerous Party” (1993), Shaffer composed the “Late Show” theme song, co-wrote the #1’80s dance hit “It’s Raining Men,”, and composed original songs for the movie “Strangers with Candy.”

Paul assembled the original band and served as musical director for the Blues Brothers, appeared with them at the 1996 Super Bowl halftime show, and co-starred in the film “Blues Brothers 2000”, as well as producing its Gold Record soundtrack. His other film credits include roles in “This Is Spinal Tap,” “Gilda Live,” “Scrooged,” “Look Who’s Talking Too,” and Disney’s animated film “Hercules”.

In addition to three-plus decades on “Late Show” and on the iconic and paradigm-shifting first five seasons of “Saturday Night Live” (who can forget his recurring portrayal of rock television impresario Don Kirshner), some of his televised appearances have included leading the band for the “We Are the World” finale of “Live Aid,” hosting CBS’s 1994 New Year’s Eve special from New York’s Times Square, acting as musical director of the closing concert at the 1996 Olympic Games, providing musical direction for Paul McCartney’s “Concert for New York” and appearing with Faith Hill on the “America: A Tribute to Heroes” telethon.
